

Recently a cell phone tower has been constructed near my home. As a result, my reception of the local radio station I listen to has gotten interference by my hearing other stations I have not heard in the past. The signal is strong enough that I cannot hear my local, preferred station. I have heard this complaint from friends that live in other areas than mine. Can't these towers be "neutralized" so they don't interfere with radio broadcasts?